

General Security Awareness Training (GSAT) Courses January to December 2010

Why is the Training required?

The Department for Transport has issued a Direction (12j) to all UK airports which states that from 28th January 2008 all staff who apply for an airport 'airside' staff pass, including staff renewing their pass, must first attend General Security Awareness Training (GSAT) run by an instructor approved by the DfT. The DfT have specified the scope and content of the training. This training is mandatory.

Certain staff listed below, who have already attended a similar kind of training specific to their role, are exempt. All other staff are in scope and include, for example, airside office workers, airline and other operational staff who go airside, including passenger staff, cargo staff who do not hold at least a Level A certificate (or a current 'old' Level 4 or higher), drivers, engineering and maintenance staff, loaders, refuellers etc., shop, catering, and other staff in departure/arrivals areas. In short, all staff other than those listed below who require an airside pass.

Who is exempt?

The following personnel are exempt from General Security Awareness Training:

- Ground Security Staff and Supervisors
- Aviation Security Managers and Instructors
- Aircrew and Aircrew Instructors
- In-Flight Caterers (who have attended catering security training)
- Cargo Operatives (who have received DfT Cargo Security training)

TrainingTeam has developed classroom training to meet this requirement. This follows the established format of similar approved courses for security and other staff and takes approximately two hours. Classroom training has the following advantages:

- the student can talk to the instructor
- points can be clarified immediately
- it's easier to cope with language difficulties
- access to a PC is not required
- training is completed on schedule

All TrainingTeam's Security Instructors are DfT approved
